Camp party for great-grandfather
A great-grandfather celebrated turning 100 with a seaside holiday in Devon attended by 105 of his relatives.

Retired businessman George Gigg and his ever-growing family have stayed at the Braddicks Holiday Centre in Westward Ho! every summer since 1970.

Mr Gigg, from Norfolk, actually had his birthday in June but waited until the family holiday to celebrate it.

Family members flew to Britain from the United States, Mozambique and Dubai to attend this year's holiday and party.

Mr Gigg has six children, 31 grandchildren and 44 great-grandchildren.

His granddaughter, Christine Greenfield, 50, from Tunbridge Wells in Kent, said they held a big celebration in a marquee last Monday.

She added: "He prefers to come for three or four days rather than a week because he worries about his garden."

"But he has already mentioned next year so I think he will do it again. It's the only chance he gets to see everyone."

The youngest family member to take part in the holiday was nine-month-old Luke Mathew, whose parents, Daniel and Caroline, live in Dubai.

The annual holidays in Westward Ho! began as a fairly small gathering so Mr Gigg's late wife could see all her family.

This year's attendance was slightly down on 2004, when 111 relatives joined the seaside holiday.
